Justice Beth Walker Participates in “Lady Justices” Educational Video

For immediate release Wednesday, April 8, 2020

CHARLESTON, W.Va. – West Virginia Supreme Court Justice Beth Walker is one of four female state supreme court justices from around the country who participated in an Arkansas educational video that can be used as an online lesson about judicial systems.

Arkansas Supreme Court Justice Rhonda Wood organized the video, which is available on YouTube: <https://youtu.be/NAuJ9NfpPa8>

“To help teachers in Arkansas and parents struggling with educational resources for youth at home, I called on my fellow ‘Lady Justices’ in other states to put together this educational video,” Justice Wood said. “My granddaughter, Blakeley, stars as she interviews us on our state Supreme Courts, the three branches of government, our jobs, Girl Scouts, advice for young girls, and how our courts are dealing with COVID 19.”

Justice Wood, Justice Walker, Texas Supreme Court Justice Eva Guzman and Michigan Supreme Court Chief Justice Bridget McCormack each participated remotely in the roundtable discussion.

“I was honored to be asked by Justice Wood to join my fellow state justices in this video. All four of us are committed to education about the judicial branch, including creative approaches like this,” Justice Walker explained. “I hope that parents and teachers in West Virginia consider using the video, which is available to everyone on YouTube.”
